STRATEGIC PLAN OVERVIEW

1994-1996

Introduction

The Strategic Plan is focused on the period from 1994 to 1996. During this period the demand for JI programs and services is anticipated to increase from 170,000 student training days to over 200,000 training days per year. At least 60% of the training will be delivered on a decentralized basis.

With the move to the new campus in New Westminster in 1995, the JI will have excellent facilities from which to develop and deliver training programs and services throughout the province. The new facilities are a strong indication of the Provincial commitment to the Justice Institute.

The Focus of the Plan

Over the years the JI has been making adjustments to the types of programs and services it delivers. It has now evolved to the point where the management systems and organizational structure need to be updated to correspond to its current role. This will also enable the Institute to successfully respond to future challenges and opportunities.

The volume of programs and services also has increased dramatically, creating growing demands for administrative and research support. Through the efforts and creativity of its staff and management, the JI has been able to increase enrollment without matching increases in its support budgets. The JI model can, and will, continue to provide the most economical training programs and services in the province. However, the constraints inherent in the current arrangements for funding of support services have reached the point where quality and effectiveness will be compromised unless more appropriate arrangements can be established.

Given the above noted conditions, the current Strategic Plan concentrates on operational, organizational, and financial initiatives.

Implementation Process

The proposed strategic initiatives are scheduled to occur over the next two years, as illustrated on the Preliminary Action Timetable, with a progress review at the end of 1995 to establish action priorities for 1996 and initiate the development of a strategic plan for 1997 to 1999.

A detailed action plan has been prepared for each of the major strategic initiatives, identifying the person or group with primary responsibility to see that the actions are carried out. In assigning responsibility, the Committee has tried to involve as wide a range of people as possible to spread the workload and provide opportunities for broad participation.

Achieving Results

The Steering Committee which has directed the preparation of this Strategic Plan will meet regularly to monitor progress on the strategic initiatives and keep everyone informed about the results of implementation efforts.

STRATEGIC PLAN IMPLEMENTATION TIMETABLE

The milestones noted on the table illustrate some of the key action targets in each of the Strategic Initiatives. More specific target dates are provided in the tables in the Strategic Goals and Actions section starting on page 10.

In order to undertake many of the actions, an updated version of the management model and organizational structure is required. The model must be based on a firm understanding of the role and mandate of the JI.

Accordingly, Strategic Initiatives A and C are considered to have a high priority for action.

LOOKING TO THE FUTURE

During the planning study, JI personnel and major client representatives were asked to comment on their perceptions of future challenges and opportunities. In addition, a number of provincial reports on future directions in education and training were reviewed. The following items provide highlights of the major factors which are likely to affect the operations of the JI over the next three years

Growth and Change

People involved in the delivery of justice and public safety services work for provincial and federal departments, municipalities, private sector companies, and community service agencies. The number of employees and volunteers in all sectors is increasing due to the pressures of population growth, technological advances, and rising expectations regarding the quality and level of services. At the same time there is growing public pressure to provide services in the most cost-effective manner possible, making it necessary to evolve new ways of delivering service. The demands being placed on those involved in justice and public safety services require continual upgrading of existing skills and expertise. Given these on-going societal and population changes in British Columbia, the demand for justice and public safety training will continue to both grow and change. The challenge will be to deliver more courses to more people while keeping costs at an acceptable level.

Emphasis on Decentralized Delivery

Many of those who seek training in these fields are already employed by service delivery agencies. This type of client will tend to increase in numbers as more maintenance and upgrading programs are introduced. The traditional college model of regional delivery and semester based programs cannot meet the needs of this clientele. They cannot afford to be absent from their job for extended periods and/or travel long distances to gain access to instruction. The JI has recognized this requirement and has responded with short duration courses, a number of decentralized services, and a year round operating schedule. However, the demand for decentralized instruction is likely to increase, making it necessary for the JI to become even more innovative in the use of open learning techniques and technologies.

A Trend Towards
Employment
Readiness and Pre-
Employment
Training

Over the past few years there has been increasing interest in adopting an employment readiness approach to justice and public safety training - an approach which has been supported by the JI. A number of programs delivered through the academies have shifted from a post-employment to an employment readiness and pre-employment basis and more changes of a similar nature are anticipated. This trend seems to be related to both budgetary pressures and a desire to reflect the evolving "professionalism" of justice and public safety training. If this trend continues, it could affect the nature of the contractual arrangements between the JI and its major clients, and shift the post-employment training focus more towards maintenance and upgrading programs.

More Inter-Academy Collaboration

At one time, the different service agencies in justice and public safety tended to operate independently of each other with relatively well defined mandates and jurisdictions. Today these jurisdictional boundaries are becoming less distinct and there are many more agencies and people involved. Personnel from different agencies, both public and private, have to coordinate their activities in order to provide effective services in a much more complex societal context. This has led to an increasing need for coordination at the training level as well. The make-up of the JI has enabled joint programs and courses, such as the First Responders Program, to be developed through inter-Academy collaboration. This type of development will likely increase in the future.

Growing Need for Enhanced
Management
Training

The increasing scale and complexity of justice and public safety services has altered the management demands of the traditional organizations. Top executive positions now require a high level of organizational, political, and personnel management skills in addition to hands-on knowledge and experience. As a result, advanced management training will become increasingly important and will require close collaboration among different post secondary institutions to provide the necessary breadth of instruction and education for these roles.

Expanding Clientele

Another feature of today's justice and public safety environment is the proliferation of agencies which provide services to augment those provided by the traditional justice and public safety organizations. Private security agencies, counseling services, referral agencies, and specialized treatment facilities are only a few of the organizations which employ individuals who require training in particular aspects of justice and public safety. The growth in demand for this type of training has been dramatic as illustrated in the enrollment pattern over the past few years, for the programs offered by the Interdisciplinary Studies Division of the JI. Some of the programs, such as conflict resolution, have attracted people from outside the justice and public safety field who find that the skills learned are applicable to many other types of situations involving negotiation and/or mediation. As the justice and public safety field continues to evolve we are likely to see more agencies and services being developed, thereby making training demands even more diverse than they are at the present time.

Increasing Value of Applied Research

In order to remain effective in this increasingly complex environment, institutions like the JI will have to become more involved in research activities to test the effectiveness of their training programs and to anticipate future training needs. Without adequate research, it will be very difficult to know if the resources allocated to training are well spent and it will be almost impossible to adjust training programs in time to meet the changing demands of the field. The JI is fortunate in that many of its major clients also have a vested interest in effective research allowing all parties to benefit from a joint venture approach to specific research projects.

A VISION FOR THE FUTURE

As illustrated in the previous section, the requirements for justice and public safety training will continue to grow and become more varied in response to increasing complexity of service demands in the province and its communities. Effective development and delivery of training programs for this sector will require close collaboration among different types of services and a comprehensive province wide delivery strategy tailored to the needs of the organizations and individuals involved. The Justice Institute is uniquely suited to meet this challenge.

To provide a focus for the Strategic Plan and assist the Justice Institute in confirming its mandate within the overall post-secondary education system in British Columbia, a clear and succinct description of the JI role has been prepared.

The proposed VISION statement reflects the aspirations and priorities expressed during the strategic planning study.

PROPOSED JI VISION

The JI envisions its role as the institution designated by the Province to coordinate the development of all post-secondary justice and public safety training programs for the Province of British Columbia, and to deliver programs in a flexible and cost effective manner in collaboration with other post-secondary institutions and agencies as appropriate.

JI MISSION AND GOALS

The Mission and Goals of the JI were reviewed and re-drafted by the Executive Committee during the planning study. The updated version was included in a Discussion Paper which was distributed throughout the Institute to a number of staff groups. This version incorporates changes which resulted from the review process.

STRATEGIC GOALS & ACTIONS

Introduction

During the strategic plan study, a series of internal meetings and workshops were conducted by Steering Committee members, so that as many people as possible could discuss management, operational, and resource related issues and concerns. In addition a series of interviews were conducted with the major clients and members of the Policy Advisory Committee. The information gathered during this process has helped to identify specific strategic goals and implementation actions to help the Justice Institute fulfill its mandate and resolve current concerns and issues. The goals and actions have been organized into eight Strategic Initiatives to focus the implementation process.

Strategic Initiatives

- A. Leadership and Governance
- B. Programs and Instructional/Student Services
- C. Management Model and Organizational Development
- D. Internal and External Communications
- E. Human Resource Development
- F. Information System Development
- G. Facilities and Equipment Development
- H. Financial Development

Action Tables

The Action Tables provided for each of the eight Strategic Initiatives, identify specific activities with identifiable results. For each action a person or group has been assigned primary responsibility to coordinate efforts and collaborate with others so that the desired results are achieved by a specified date.

LEADERSHIP AND GOVERNANCE

Goals

Many of the initiatives identified in this strategic plan are intended to ensure that the JI continues to provide effective leadership in justice and public safety training in concert with the Ministries and agencies which are involved in providing these services to the community. In order to introduce and manage change in a pro-active rather than reactive manner and achieve the JI Vision, the following goals have been established.

1. Discuss and confirm the mandate and role of the JI within the post-secondary system with the Ministry of Skills Training and Labour (MSTL).
2. Discuss and confirm mandate and role of the JI with academy clients.
3. Continue to work with academy clients to identify and address training issues.
4. Clarify, for staff and clients, the role of the Board in providing governance for the JI.
5. Identify key justice and public safety training issues in BC and address them with community organizations, groups, and individuals.
6. Promote the involvement of women, First Nations people, and minority groups.

Actions

Fifteen specific actions have been identified to help achieve the leadership and governance goals. One of the major thrusts will be to confirm the updated role and mandate of the JI, to help provide a clear direction for the future and resolve funding concerns. ## MANAGEMENT MODEL AND ORGANIZATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Goals

The support and commitment of JI personnel are critical to the realization of the JI Vision. One of the ways to mobilize the creative forces and energy of the people involved in the JI is to have a management system and organizational structure which facilitates effective participation in development and delivery decisions. The following goals have been identified to help guide the process of refinement and change which is part of the strategic plan implementation.

1. Update existing management model and organizational structure.
2. Expand functions of Finance and Administration to provide adequate management of: personnel, facilities, equipment, information, and finances.
3. Ensure that committees are meeting the needs of the JI.
4. Encourage cross-divisional interaction on a professional level (e.g. personnel transfers between academies for specific projects)
5. Acknowledge staff participation in committees as an integral part of job responsibilities.

Actions

The primary strategic initiative for the development of management systems and organizational structure is to prepare and implement proposals for change. This will involve consideration of the way in which the JI makes decisions on programs, delivery approaches, administration, and resource management. This model will provide a framework for establishing the requirements for personnel, information, equipment, facilities, and financial resources. Ten specific actions have been identified in this regard.

Because there are a large number of committees involved in the management process, six initiatives have been identified which deal specifically with updating of this aspect of the JI organization.

The formal introduction of a new management model and organizational structure for the JI will take some time to complete. During the course of the study, a number of opportunities for more immediate changes have been identified. Given that these changes could be instituted prior to completion of the overall model, they have been designated as "interim" changes for which specific actions have been identified.

INFORMATION SYSTEM DEVELOPMENT

Goals

An effective and accessible information system is critical to the smooth operation of the JI. The following goals have been proposed for improving the JI Information System.

1. Ensure that relevant and appropriate management information is collected and distributed in an efficient manner.
2. Facilitate timely sharing of information throughout the organization.
3. Maintain up-to-date training and reference information to support program development and delivery.

Actions

An effective information system is critical to the successful implementation of management system improvements and achievement of communication goals. Before making significant changes to the information system or purchasing new equipment and computer software, it is important to have a clear picture of the way that the system should work to serve the needs of the JI. ## FACILITIES & EQUIPMENT DEVELOPMENT

Goals

With the design of the new JI campus in New Westminster well underway, facility related concerns tended to focus on the provision of appropriate accommodation during the period up to the planned move in 1995. Accordingly, the following goals have been proposed.

1. Maintain a high standard of buildings and grounds maintenance prior to move to new JI.
2. Support the new facility planning process now underway.

Actions

Given that the new campus will be available for occupancy in 1995, facility and equipment decisions need to be made with this event in mind. It is also considered important that the existing facilities be maintained in an appropriate manner during the period up to the move. The following actions are proposed to achieve these goals.

FINANCIAL DEVELOPMENT

Goals

In order to obtain sufficient financial resources to fund initiatives which will accomplish the JI Mission and to use the funds in the most efficient manner possible, the following goals have been proposed.

1. Obtain sufficient funds to support a high quality of educational, financial, and administrative support for JI academies and divisions.
2. Obtain appropriate instructional funding from MSTL for fee-for-service programs not covered by major client contracts.
3. Expand the financial resource base of the JI.

Actions

A target date of January 1994 has been set for establishing appropriate funding arrangements with MSTL, as noted in the Leadership & Governance Initiative "A". This is one of the key factors which will help ensure that there are adequate financial resources available to operate with sufficient staff, provide appropriate support services to clients and students, and deliver effective and high quality programs and services. Other actions required to achieve the stated financial goals include effective cost estimating for client contracts and active pursuit of additional revenue from a variety of sources.
